A University of Michigan Medical School professor has received hundreds of thousands of dollars in research grants from Israel's national health ministry, a website that tracks financial ties between Israeli companies and foreign governments has found. Since 2005, Michigan professor Anissa Matar has received $287,922 from the Israel Ministry of Health to conduct research that examines the health impacts of war, especially the "psychological and physiological responses of children to armed conflict and war," the website Israel International Business Monitor, IBIBM, which tracks such ties, found. "Matar, an expert on the emotional effects of war, regularly has received research grants from the Israeli government, which for the past two decades has been a major funder of medical studies on the psychological and physiological impacts of war," the website reported. The website's editor, Efraim Halevy, who wrote the article, said the grants can be made under the auspices of the ministry's Commission for Peace and Security, which promotes bilateral cooperation in the fields of science, technology, and medicine. "The research is done in Israel, which is where the research should be done," said Prof. Motti Seligson, the chief of the department of radiology at the Assuta Medical Center in Israel. "The aim of the study is good," he said. "Maybe there is a way for us to understand more about the 82157476af
